Background:

Born June 19, 1951, Burns, Oregon. Mr. Bradach worked in the Oregon and Washington construction industry, as a construction laborer and deckhand, during several years of high school and college. After graduation from the University of Oregon, he worked as accountant for Morrison-Knudsen Company, Inc. on the Terminal Project for the Trans-Alaska Pipeline in Valdez, Alaska, and Willamette-Western Corporation (later Riedel International, Inc.) in Portland. He practiced law for nearly fourteen years in the Construction and Design Law Practice Group at Stoel Rives Boley Jones & Grey, Portland's largest law firm, chairing that Practice Group for two years, before departing in June, 1993 to start his own construction and design law firm, Bradach Law Offices. At Bradach Law Offices, Mr. Bradach and his associates have since handled a broad range of business and litigation matters for Owners, Contractors, Architects and Subcontractors in Oregon and Washington.
